Target Price: $70

- Each month, Emerson provides a tally of rolling 3-month orders on a GAAP and constant-currency basis. Given the breadth of Emerson's offerings across the modern industrial economy in areas including automation, sensors, process technology, and residential & commercial construction, its monthly order trend is a good barometer of global industrial demand trend.
  - Rolling 3-month orders for May 2017 increased 8%, while underlying orders (excluding adverse currency effects) rose 9%. This represented a significant turnaround from the low-single-digit trend in the preceding two months.
  - Automation Solutions orders increased in high-single-digits, with North American oil & gas markets acting as the primary drivers of growth. A strong turnaround in bookings and capital spending by U.S. shale customers drove upstream growth, while midstream customers invested in automation upgrades and infrastructure buildout. Europe and Latin American energy customers also drove growth, offsetting weaker Asia.
  - Commercial & Residential Solutions orders increased high-single-digits led by North American HVAC markets. Professional tool demand in oil & gas and construction-related markets remains favorable. Additionally, both Europe and Asia were strong, reflecting broad-based air conditioning demand and heat pump demand in China.
  - We regard the improvement in Emerson's order trends as positive both for the EMR shares and for the global industrial economy, given broad-based strength across industries and regions. We regard the data as particularly positive for U.S. energy companies exposed to the major shale basins.
